A warm farewell

Our impact on people's lives is greater than ever right now. In the first half of this year, we provided services to 1,184 people, compared to 897 in the first half of 2022. This steep increase of 31% highlights the pressing need for our service across the industry; we must continue to work together to sustain our community.

After six years, I am retiring as Perennial's Chief Executive. During my time, we have grown as a charity in response to challenging times caused by social, economic and world events. I am proud to retire with dedicated services in place to benefit and support more people than ever in horticulture, leaving the community better equipped to manage their wellbeing, improve their lives and prevent issues from arising. Thank you to everyone who has joined me on this journey; I am pleased to hand over the reins to Jamie Gault, the new Chief Executive, whose experience will strengthen Perennial's position within the gardening and horticulture industry even further. I bid you a fond farewell and leave with gratitude to our people who contribute so much to our land and lives.

With warmest wishes
Peter Newman, Chief Executive

"Thank you, Peter, for six years of leadership. Perennial's achievements in supporting and raising awareness for all those who work with plants, trees, flowers or grass are a testament to your hard work and commitment. We wish you the very best for the future."
Perennial Chairman
Paul Rochford

Meet our new Chief Executive

We are delighted to welcome Jamie Gault as our new Chief Executive this November, joining us at a time when demand for our services has never been greater.

Perennial Chairman, Paul Rochford says: "Part of our role in providing support for those facing challenging times is to help prevent issues from arising and Jamie's experience will particularly assist the delivery of our prevent services and activities."

Jamie's work in the charity sector has primarily focused on early intervention and prevention. He adds: "I understand the importance of timely, accessible services and the provision of quality information, support and advice. I am delighted to be joining the Perennial family, building on Peter's legacy and working with the Board, the wider team and partners. I am committed to making a positive impact on the lives of those in the horticultural community and their families."

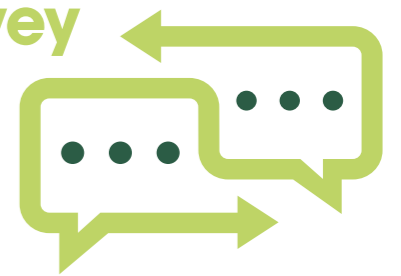

Let us know your thoughts about the charity in our Perception Survey

Tell us what you think of us in our Perception Survey so we can be even better at building better lives for people in horticulture. Our short survey won't take long to complete, but it could make all the difference to individuals and their families who need our help, so your feedback is extremely valuable to us.

By understanding how you see us we can identify areas for improvement, shape our future strategies and progress our services. It's really all about being there for all those who work with plants, trees, flowers or grass in the right way and in the right places.

If you work in the industry and are interested in providing personal feedback, you can also join our new Lived Experience Online Panel. This is an opportunity to get involved in research and share the experiences and challenges you've faced while working in horticulture. Your journey will help us align our support with real needs and expectations.

Help us have a lasting impact and build better lives for people in horticulture. Take part in our Perception Survey at perennial.org.uk/perception.

Winter wellbeing

Winter can mean challenging working conditions for people in horticulture. As we move into the colder, quieter season, now is a good time to take care and take stock. Let us help maintain your physical, mental and financial wellbeing with our top tips for winter.

Tell us about it
If you need advice and information or want to talk something through that's affecting you or your family, tell us about it at perennial.org.uk/services-contact-form or call us on 0800 093 8543.

Financial Wellbeing tips

1 Make a budget

Decide how much to spend this winter and make a list of all expenses starting with the big ones like Christmas.

2 Energy saving tricks

Turn down your thermostat by one degree, turn off heaters in rooms you aren't using and shut the door.

3 Insure against the worst

Check that your home insurance policy covers you for flooding, burst pipes and storm damage, which are more likely in winter.

4 Get the right level of support

See if you're eligible for the Winter Fuel Payment, Cold Weather Payment, Warm Home Discount and Cost of Living payments.

5 Reflect and plan

Use what you've learned this winter to start planning early for the next festive season.

Go to perennial.org.uk/bemoneysmart for more ways to Be Money Smart including nudge, our free money management tool.

Health & Wellbeing tips

1 How to sleep bed-er

Falling asleep on the couch interrupts your sleep cycles. If you feel yourself drifting off, take yourself to bed.

2 Boreout, what's that?

Shorter days and less work in winter can leave you bored or restless. Plan something new to do.

3 We've got your back

Cold weather causes ligaments and muscles to tighten so stretch and warm up before starting physical work.

4 Do you know your numbers?

During winter you may be less active and not eat or drink as well as you should. Check your blood pressure numbers now.

5 Don't make light of it

Less sunlight in winter can make you feel low, so make sure you spend time in daylight and top up your vitamin D.

Partner's show garden raises awareness for mental health and Perennial

Enabling people to be more in control of their wellbeing is a task that we encourage our Perennial Partners and the industry to support us with.

At BBC Gardeners' World Live, our partners did an amazing job with their silver-awarded show garden 'Escaping the Seasons of the Mind' in support of Perennial. Lilidh Matthews, founder of Finding Roots, and John Tallis, owner of Outdoor Living Gardens, combined their skills to create the garden after meeting at Pie and Pint, our social event for Perennial Partners.

As advocates for mental health, John and Lilidh wanted their charity garden to highlight mental wellbeing and people's emotions through the seasons along with the benefit of spending time outdoors. It centred around two facts: the majority of suicides happen in the autumn and humans spend 90% of their life indoors.

"We had an amazing response and coverage for Perennial, and every presenter came onto the garden, including Perennial's President Alan Titchmarsh and Adam Frost who described the garden as a powerful space. It was important for the garden to be a space for reflection, and it was. I could hear visitors talking about their mental health struggles and how the garden we created has made them realise what they can achieve at home. I hope it reached people in horticulture too, so they know Perennial is there to support them," says John.

To become a Perennial Partner or talk about your awareness and fundraising ideas, contact Phil Swainston, Perennial Corporate Partnership Manager at pswainston@perennial.org.uk.

Put food on the table - £100

The decision between heating and eating is a real and present problem for those in our horticultural community. Your generosity today could provide a food voucher throughout the year but allow a family to feed themselves this Christmas.

Thank you, Norma, your family fund has a meaningful future.

Coming from a line of passionate gardeners with glorious gardens, Norma wants her family's money to do some good for the industry she loves. She's known about our work for years and with no children or siblings, she has decided to gift her money to us in her will.

"I want to do something meaningful with my money. By gifting our family fund to Perennial, it feels like we'll all still be around and it's nice to know that the money we leave could help others. I know how important Perennial's work and gardening is and that my family's legacy will be in good hands," says Norma.

Our gardens are special places

Over 30,000 visitors enjoyed our beautiful gardens last year. Gifted to us by special supporters, each is the heart of a community. Under our care, the gardens help build better futures for people in horticulture through the funds they raise and the life they bring to gardeners, apprentices and trainees, volunteers and visitors. Here's why each garden is special to someone...

Trainee Kate Holliday began volunteering at York Gate while studying practical horticulture and is now completing a traineeship and horticultural theory course there. For Kate, the garden is an exceptional place:

"For its humble size, York Gate is exceptional. Its diversity of plants allows us to learn from a wonderful variety of ornamental and botanical horticulture. It's a special place to volunteer and train, and I've loved every minute so far. I've changed career through the garden, stepping into the world of horticulture and opening the door to all sorts of opportunities I'm grateful for and cherish."

Experimentation and creativity is encouraged here; hedge cutting the iconic yew sails and taking responsibility for the paved garden and recently extended rockery was a privilege and a great learning curve. York Gate Garden is often described as a hidden gem and it is. It's immensely special and even more so because of the people who work and volunteer here. We have fun, support each other and bring the garden to life as a team, carrying it forward for Perennial."

Senior Gardener Jim Madge has worked at The Laskett for over a year through its changeover from a private to a public garden. For him it was love at first sight:

"I first visited The Laskett as a volunteer. It's such an intricate, magical garden it blew me away, so when the opportunity for a senior gardener arose, I went for it. It's a deeply personal garden, not like most. Every area means something; my favourite is Muff's Parade named after a much-loved cat, the Revd Wenceslas Muff, as it has something for every season."

Developing a small garden and getting it ready to greet visitors is a challenge I enjoy. There's lots to think about, but I think we're doing something right as we have repeat visitors coming back with their friends and the volunteers turn up religiously, come rain or shine. Now people know it's there, there's a real buzz about the garden. Some visitors stay for hours; I often chat with them about Perennial and the garden. It's rewarding to know the time we've invested is giving back to people, and on a bad day, the garden balances you."

FULLERS MILL

one of Perennial's gardens

We'll miss you Annie!

Garden Manager Annie Dellbridge is saying a fond farewell to Fullers Mill. Annie was working at the garden when founder and creator Bernard Tickner gifted it to us and after 13 years, she shares what the garden means to her.

"Every part of Fullers Mill is special to me. I especially love the garden in late spring when it's fresh with new growth, feeling full of hope and new beginnings. It's become a botanical garden with an interesting mix of trees, shrubs, perennials and lilies. I always tell visitors to explore all of it because there's a surprise around every corner. If I had to choose, I think the scented lilies, trees and views across the mill pond bring me the most joy.

The garden's lovely tranquil setting and relaxed energy are the basis for many friendships. I'll miss the staff, apprentices, volunteers and visitors and seeing the garden through their eyes. Their enthusiasm is contagious and we have a wonderful community now. I've loved rejuvenating the garden with the team, learning together and watching it grow. As the garden evolves, it creates another opportunity to plant something else exciting, but we're always mindful of Bernard's vision. I was privileged to work with him in the early years, and carrying on his gardening style is important. I've been the custodian for many happy years; now it's time for someone else to enjoy the experience of creating something that's so much more than just a garden."

With Christmas just around the corner, we're asking directly for your support.

You'll read inside how already this year many more people have turned to us for help and with the winter months ahead this need will continue to be there, if not increase.

Every day people get in contact - either for themselves, to help a loved one or on behalf of a colleague. And there are lots of different reasons why people turn to us such as bereavement, the impact of an accident, health issues or a family breakdown to name but a few. Many also access our free advice and information on our website and through our free health & wellbeing and money management tools. All of this you'll see highlighted in our Christmas Appeal over the coming months.

It's a reminder of why we're here.
If you can, please donate. Thank you.

Perennial's help is free and given in confidence. As a charity, it relies on the support of all those in the horticultural industry and also from all of us who enjoy the benefits of their hard work. We can all play a part. We need the people behind the flowers, plants, trees or grass.

Help us be there when they need us."
